

How do those four chemicals make DNA work inside your cells?

The first thing you should know is that DNA can copy itself. Inside the cell, the double helix of DNA splits apart.

Each single strand creates another strand from the chemicals—A, T, C, and G—that are already within the cell, matching A with T and C with G.

